
JESSIE HUI | THOUGHTS ARE JUST CLOUDS, IMPORTANT CLOUDS

In thoughts are just clouds, important clouds, Jessie Hui explores the quiet complexities of self-care as both a personal ritual and a site of internal negotiation. Her paintings chart the subtle hesitations that shape her daily life—moments caught between rest and productivity, discipline and indulgence, tenderness and self-critique.

Through a distinctively playful yet introspective visual language, Hui transforms these fleeting tensions into vivid compositions that balance humour with reflection. Working across paint and digital media, she employs colour, texture, and form to give shape to the intangible processes of thought and feeling, suggesting that care itself is an evolving, imperfect practice.

Hui creates compositions that hover between introspection and observation, inviting viewers to consider how care operates as both a personal ethic and a cultural performance. Originally from Hong Kong and now based on Kaurua Land (Adelaide), Hui draws on her lived experience of transition and adaptation to consider how self-awareness operates within broader emotional and cultural landscapes. A graduate of UNSW's Bachelor of Fine Arts (Honours) program, she continues to develop a painterly vocabulary attentive to the everyday negotiations of being—inviting viewers to recognise, within her works, the delicate art of caring for oneself.
